IMPRISONMENT

The defendant is committed to the custody of the United States Bureau of Prisons to be imprisoned for a total term of 46 months.

The Court recommends that Immigration and Customs Enforcement begin removal proceedings during service of sentence.

Defendant Reynaldo Barraza-Barraza's offense level is 20 and his criminal history is category IV. His advisory guidelines sentence range is therefore 51 to 63 months. The Court, however, believes that a variance to a sentence of 46 months is appropriate in this case. In arriving at this sentence, the Court has considered not only the guidelines, but also other sentencing goals. Specifically, the Court has considered the guideline sentencing range established for the applicable category of offense committed by the applicable category of defendant, and does not believe that the punishment that the guidelines set forth is appropriate here.

Because the Court believes that a sentence of 51 months, the bottom of the guideline range, is slightly too high for a defendant with one felony of the nature of that in Barraza-Barraza's history, the Court will vary some from the bottom of the guideline range. The Court is concerned, however, that Barraza-Barraza has not been deterred by lengthy criminal sentences in the past. The Court will sentence Barraza-Barraza to 46 months, which gets his sentence out of the 50-month range, which is too high, but is a longer sentence than he received in the past, which sentences have not deterred him from engaging in criminal conduct.

The Court has considered the kinds of sentences and ranges that the guidelines establish, and the Court believes that a variance is appropriate in this case. The Court is concerned about Barraza-Barraza's criminal history and believes that a lengthy sentence is necessary to protect the public. While Barraza-Barraza argues that he did not know that his re-entry would subject him to a severe penalty, the Court is skeptical, given that he has past experiences with United States Immigration and Customs Enforcement, that Barraza-Barraza was not on notice that if he returned again to the United States he would be subject to longer imprisonment. The Court also believes that Barraza-Barraza had some recognition that, when one commits crimes in the United States, they impact one's ability to come back.

The Court believes that a sentence of 46 months reflects the seriousness of this offense, promotes respect for the law, and provides a more just punishment than one in the 50-month range. The Court also believes it affords adequate deterrence, and given Barraza-Barraza's criminal history, the Court believes this lengthy sentence adequately protects the public. The Court also believes that the sentence otherwise fully reflects each of the factors embodied in 18 U.S.C. § 3552(a). As the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit has noted, the Court's task is not to come up with a reasonable sentence, but to come up with a sentence that appropriately balances these factors. The Court believes that its sentence balances these factors more appropriately than does the advisory guideline range. Moreover, the Court believes its sentence is reasonable and more so than the advisory guidelines sentence. Moreover, the Court believes that a sentence of 46 months is sufficient without being greater than is necessary to comply with the purposes of punishment set forth in the Sentencing Reform Act. The Court therefore sentences Reynaldo Barraza-Barraza to a term of 46 months in the custody of the Bureau of Prisons.
